The Columbus, Texas, Citizen says: Prof. C. V. Kiley, United States entomologist, has been spending a few days in that section, in the pursuit of the investigations authorized by congress into the cotton worm. The limited amount ($5000) appropriated has necessarily cramped Prof. Kiley in his labor in this line, as he has not a sufficient force in the field for the vast amount of labor required, and the numerous different avenues, some of them appearing to be of little, but of vast importance, to be pursued in the proper investigation of the subject.

have not increased, owing to the unfavorable conditions to such increase, and there are now so few in the larger portion of the country that the increase which a single additional generation represents could do no harm. In other words, under the most favorable circumstances to the development of the worm, such as continued weather a month must elapse before it can become abundant, and two months elapse before it can be generally destructive, a month being required for each generation from egg to moth or parent. Three weeks since the second generation in south Texas threatened to do much damage. The professor's latest advices, from a specimen of the worms taken at the bottom of a well, show that in many localities the worms have since then disappeared.

Among the fruits that are almost entirely forgotten or overlooked, is the quince, and yet there is no reason why it should not be as profitable as any other fruit. Great quantities of quinces are shipped every season from California to St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati and other leading markets, at great expense, about $1 per three-peck box. The only quince orchard of any pretensions near the market, that we know of, was one that flourished near Troy, Ill., six or eight years ago. At that time large shipments were made from the orchard to St. Louis, where the fruit sold for $1.50 to a barrel. The last two years prices have been much lower, ranging from $4. to $6 a barrel. — Columbian Rural World.

be best appreciated by reviewing the facts that the area of arable lands in the United States in 1900 was 1,500,000,000 acres, while at the present time after cultivation is estimated to be 171,900,000 acres or less than 12 percent square miles. It is probable that the next generation of the United States farms will yield $11,000,000,000, and an annual production of $3,500,000,000. The fact that more than one-half of the arable lands in the United States are in the hands of a few owners, and that the ordinary practice of life are directly employed in agriculture is at once a sufficient evidence of its unreversibility and importance.

At present the United States has 1,371,000 acres in Indian corn, producing 1,371,000 bushels; 322,200 acres in wheat, with a yield of 422,000,000 bushels; 1,176,000 acres in cotton, yielding 1,750,000 bushels; 1,000,000 acres in barley with a crop of 25,000,000 bushels; 1,621,000 acres in rye, with 25,000,000 bushels, and 672,000 acres in buckwheat, with a crop of 12,277,000 bushels. Thus the total area of cultivation of 1878 was 2,284,900,000 bushels, raised to over 476,000,000, while in 1874 the total crops from improved systems of cultivation, as the farmer of the future will be able to do. A system of agriculture presents but little to be proud of which averages to the acre only a few bushels of wheat, or but few bushels of wheat, less than twenty-seven bushels of corn, and only twenty-eight bushels of oats. But such a system of agriculture is capable of in this direction, it is not too much to affirm that our farm crops, and the pressure upon, may be enabled in quantity.

No House but Has Some Darling There.

Longfellow never wrote more truthful or touching poetry than that inspired poem entitled "Resignation."

"There is no house however watched and guarded,
 But one soul lives there;
 There is no female, never so defended,
 But one child lives there;
 And this is all that we can make of it,
 That somewhere there
 The air is full of farewell to the dying,
 And musing for the dead;
 And this is all that we can make of it,
 That somewhere there
 Will be comforted."

What family is there that does not find its complement in one or more who dwell on earth? What family is there that does not find its complement in one or more who are in heaven? What family is there who does not have a broken heart, the strings of which were once broken by the death of a loved one? What family is there who does not have a heart, whose heart now make music in the heavenly choir?

By relieving the cause of the trouble, they remove the blood from poisonous humors, and thus impart health and vitality to the body, raising the system to its normal condition, without which no one can feel well.
